STATE OF OKLAHOMA

2005 MANUFACTURING CLUSTER ANALYSIS

DEFINITION OF INDUSTRY

Manufacturing typically defines mechanically, physically, or chemically transforming materials, substances, or components into tangible goods that have value. The manufacture of goods includes the use of mechanical means, like an assembly line, as well as hand-made products, like goods in a bakery or tailored suits. Typically businesses that primarily manufacture goods are commonly called plants, mills, or factories.

The manufacturing industry transforms raw goods from other industries like agriculture or forestry into new products that may be sold for further processing, and produces finalized products that are ready for consumption or sale. This dependence on other industries for production inputs makes clearly defining industrial boundaries difficult to do. As already mentioned, the agriculture & food processing and forestry sectors provide inputs. Portions of the oil & gas, aerospace, and mining industries also overlap into the manufacturing industry. The inclusion of such industries makes Oklahoma's manufacturing sector very diverse.

SIGNIFICANCE AND HIGHLIGHTS

There are 393 different manufacturing classifications in Oklahoma. There are 202 companies that have over 100 employees. Of the 4,018 employer units that employ less than fifty employees, 887 listed zero employees for the period. This results in 3,131 employers that have one to fifty employees.

Oklahoma's manufacturing location quotient increased from 2002 to 2004, even though Oklahoma's manufacturing sector saw a loss in jobs. This occurred because the U.S. manufacturing industry saw a proportionately greater decrease in jobs than Oklahoma.

Oklahoma serves as host to a wide variety of manufacturing. Oklahoma is no longer strictly an oil production or an agricultural state. Oklahoma has competitive firms in many of the sectors of the manufacturing industry, and is emerging in numerous sub-sectors that manufacture high tech products for several industries.
